“ I can't put into words how deeply you are missed. Death is inevitable, but not understood until it's at your door. The loss isn't something we can even prepare ourselves for. We may think we'll react one way, when in fact we never really know until we are knee deep in it. I had hoped to feel better after some expected period of time, but there's a sort of emptiness that doesn't subside. I'm not sure that goes away. But what it tells me is that you had a huge impact on my life. That you are responsible for all good things that have come about. It tells me that I shall never take personal relationships for granted again. You've taught me a lot and it didn't end when I moved out on my own. As a matter of fact, I'm always learning from you. I hope you passed in peace, aware of all the most important qualities you instilled in us. We love you and are eternally grateful for the most important things you gave to us.
